"Three Forms"

"Three Forms in Aqua"

"Three Forms" in sunset colors is an extremely popular piece. While at an arts festival, we were asked if we could re-create it in our Aqua color theme. We said, "No Problem!"

Here it is in Sunset Colors and here it is in Aqua Tones.

Each piece acquires it's own personality based on the colors used!

"Musings"

"Natural Musings Triptych"

One of my most popular pieces is "Musings." The properties of the glass and lighting in my art greatly affect the colors in the piece. By changing these I can drastically transform the artwork to suit different decors and environments. The original art may be cool blue tones but if you have a rustic country house you may need warmer colors, and I can do that. For the clearest illustration of this, look at original Musings and its variations: Autumn Musings, Musings Natural, and Romance. Each was created as clients came to me and said, "I like this piece but my place needs these colors..."

"Atlantis"

While at an art show in South Florida, a married couple saw Atlantis on display and loved it. But they had a problem: Their modern Florida condo had extremely high ceilings and narrow walls. A single canvas would be dwarfed in that setting. After the show, the couple emailed us to see what Scott could do with their space based on Atlantis.

With the color palette and style of Atlantis in mind, Scott set about creating a new piece that could complement such a large room. Using this style, he came up with a piece that solved their design problem, A Day in Manhattan.

The evolution of the artwork didn't stop there. An interior designer had already chosen the colors and fabrics for a bedroom but hadn't yet found artwork that worked for his décor. He saw A Day in Manhattan and envisioned the top two panels as a horizontal piece. Scott took this direction; and using samples of color swatches and fabric samples from the room, he created the next stage in the evolution, Morning Inspiration.
